

WHAT ARE THE COMMON INDICATIONS FOR AN EMERGENCY TOOTH EXTRACTION?

When you have severe tooth decay or a bad injury, an Adult Dentist Near Me may recommend some teeth to be extracted immediately. Sometimes, getting repaired teeth with crowns or fillings are not enough in lots of cases, therefore you may need a tooth extraction.

Oral problems like bleeding teeth, extensive pain, and saving teeth always need immediate attention to be stopped.

Signs and symptoms that cause an emergency tooth extraction:

- You are experiencing severe sensitivity.
- Extensive pain in teeth and gums.
- Loosened teeth.
- Building up pus in your mouth.
- Discoloration of the teeth.
- Swelling with severe pain.

Common Indications of tooth extraction:

There are some of the common factors of tooth extraction near me discussed below:

Injury to the teeth:

The most common reason for tooth extraction is a sudden injury that occurred during a sports activity like playing Football. Other than that tooth extraction depends on the type and seriousness of the injury. When such a kind of injury happens, you should see your dentist so that he/she can take immediate action. Your Dental Specialist Near Me will take an x-ray of the affected tooth and if the condition is good, he/she will try their possible best to save it. If the area has been infected, no other treatments will work on this condition. Only an emergency tooth extraction may be necessary.

Abscessed Tooth:

A tooth abscess is a hollow space within the tooth filled with pus that is caused by a bacterial infection. The abscessed tooth can be caused at different areas of the tooth for distinct reasons and that is quite painful. Since an abscess is unable to heal on its own, when time passes out, it may convert into a severely infected tooth.

Periodontal Disease at its advanced stage:

If your gum disease has reached its advanced stage, it won't be good for deep bone pockets deeper than five millimeters, and it will be impossible to save the tooth. In that case, your dentist will refer you to a periodontist. But, to get relieved from the pain, extraction will be necessary.

Extensive dental cavity:

If your oral cavity has been expanded in size and the nerve is exposed, it can cause severe pain. This condition requires an emergency extraction. It may be possible that your dentist will recommend a root canal if the soft and delicate tissue inside the tooth is infected.

In addition, if the tooth decay is severe, it can destroy the tooth pulp ahead to its restoration. And, if it is not treated timely, you will be recommended an extraction.

Orthodontic Treatment

If you are recommended for orthodontic treatment, the orthodontist may take out some teeth of the patient symmetrically, who has crowded teeth, so that a balance can be maintained of the bite.

An oral surgeon may remove bone or gum tissue in order to do tooth extraction.

If you are noticing any one of the following indications, you need an emergency tooth extraction. So. consult your dentist immediately to conduct the procedure.
