

WHAT ARE DENTURES AND THEIR TYPES?

Dentures and Implants have no age limit. These can be for young adults or even seniors. Tooth loss can be caused by various factors such as tooth decay, genetics, and even drug abuse. This is why some people need to have implants to restore their smiles and get their confidence back. Despite that, there are some people who need implants but are afraid to have them. To erase those fears away, here is a guide giving basic information about implants.

What conditions require dentures?

If you're experiencing one or more of these right now contact dentures houston for a consultation right away. Here are the initial signs that might indicate that you need dentures and the various treatments available.

1. Severe Toothaches
2. Red, swollen and decayed gums
3. Loose, crooked, or moving teeth
4. Difficulty chewing or digesting foods
5. And the most important cause of getting dentures is missing teeth.

Additional signs may also occur when you have dental issues, Talk to your dentist and get more information about the treatment that can save your teeth. However, Dentures And Implants are two different options for missing teeth. Find dentures near me to know more detailed information.

You have got an idea about the condition you might need dentures. It is very important to know what type of dentures you may need? And you need to focus on the advantages of dentures also. Besides this, the question may arise: How Much Are Dentures? So the cost of dentures will depend on the dentist and location.

Dentures will help you to be confident, smile, and give a better speech. Apart from this, dentures increase confidence, provide a healthier shape for your face. In case of losing the teeth, your faces can become saggy and look older. However, dentures can maintain the healthy shape of the face, ensuring that the patient looks normal and even younger than they looked before dentures.

Types of Dentures

There are many types of dentures available but here are 5 major types of dentures that you can use:

Complete dentures - Complete dentures entail the replacement of every tooth in the upper and lower sections of your mouth. This is specifically advantageous for patients who are missing a great number of their teeth in a single arch. The level of comfort depends on the bones, tongue, muscle, and saliva. After healing the pulled-out teeth, patients can start wearing conventional implant dentures.

Partial dentures - When only some teeth are missing, partial dentures are suitable. These aim to correct the gaps in your teeth and help maintain tooth alignment by stopping your natural teeth from shifting. Also, partial dentures can prevent more tooth loss brought by gum disease and tooth decay.

Immediate dentures - These kinds of dentures and implants are fitted on the mouth all at once. Immediate dentures, however, require adjustments after the healing process. After tooth extractions from this procedure, it can take months for the tissue and bone to stabilize.

Upper dentures - Upper dentures are made of the same materials as a complete denture, but are only designed for the upper arch of your teeth. These are also easier to adjust.

Overdentures - This procedure is similar to complete dentures. One of the main differences it has over complete dentures is not all of the teeth are extracted. The remaining teeth are used for support, giving more stabilization during chewing. Having over dentures requires more appointments until the procedure is complete.