Difference between the Laser Teeth Whitening and Zoom Whitening:

Laser teeth whitening is the most advanced, most effective, and painless method in the present scenario. This method uplifts the stain and discoloration of the teeth by using the peroxide-based gel applied to the teeth. This is the use of the chemical reaction for the stains that can cause gum irritation if attaching of the gum occurs.

Before starting the treatment, the dentist ensures the gums are protected with a dab around the mouth. After that, when the stains are broken down, this helps in the lightning of stains that are of the darker shade. This treatment needs the laser beamed to every tooth at a time.

On the other side, Zoom Teeth Whitening is the bleaching process used to lighten the shade of the teeth. Before this treatment, the dentist covers the gum with a paste of hydrogen peroxide so that the gum does not get a burning sensation.

Dentists ensure that your gums are protected so that this 15 minutes can be a comfortable time for you.

The significant difference between these two procedures is the instrument used to activate the hydrogen peroxide method. The bleaching agent used in the zoom lighting process is heated up before the application by ensuring that the solution is neither too hot nor too cold so that the patient will not feel uncomfortable.

In the other process, using laser light helps lift or remove all the stains and lighten the smile. The laser treatment lasts much more extended periods than the zoom teeth whitening process.
