What exactly are full-arch dental implants?

If you are the one who is about to take the dental implants, then it is necessary to know more about them. The full mouth restoration near me is also termed an all-on-4 or maybe an all-on-6 implant. These are not like the traditional dentures that will be on your gums, but the full-arch implants are anchored into the jawbone, which can provide a more permanent and stable solution for your smile.

What is the process like?

Here are some of the steps that are commonly followed in the preparation of dental implants.

- It will start with the consultation session, in which the doctor will examine and evaluate the oral health, and they will also take X-rays to create treatment plans.
- After this step, the doctor will be implanting the teeth in your jawbone. This will be done by placing the anesthesia in your jaw so that you are not feeling any pain.
- Following it, there will be a healing period that will ensure that your implant is healed so that it can function properly in the future.
- After the healing, the dentist will then secure it with the connectors, which are like the attachments that are attached to the implants.
- Finally, a custom-made bridge of teeth is attached to the abutments.

How do full-arch dental implants work?

The process involves placing four to six titanium implants into the jawbone. These implants act as roots for the prosthetic teeth. Once the implants are securely in place, a custom-made bridge of artificial teeth is attached to them. This setup not only restores your smile but also improves your ability to chew and speak.

Who is the right candidate for full mouth implants near me?

Now that you are aware of the major steps that will be followed in dental implants, It is the right time to know who is the right candidate for this. If you are the one who is having tooth loss or may be having bone loss, you might require a bone graft before the implants can be placed. A thorough dental examination and consultation with a specialist will determine your eligibility.

How long does the entire process take?

Knowing about the entire procedure and the accurate timing can make things more perfect. A few hours may pass during the initial surgery to place the implants. However, the healing process can take a few months, usually between three and six months. Additional sessions are required to insert the prosthetic teeth and abutments after the wound has healed. The entire procedure may take between four and eight months.
