Navigate This Workbook

I have a book to read.

I don't have a book to read.

USE THE WRITING WORKSHEETS

As you get to know the characters in your book, try your hand at writing about how they would act outside of events in the book, how the story would go if a different narrator told it, or how the story world compares to the real world.

Use the reading log to keep track of how many pages you read each week.

USE THE DECISION CHARTS

Use the decision charts to give you ideas to pick out a book to read. It's a good place to start whether you read a little or a lot. Each chart begins with a school subject. Which subject areas do you like most? Start there.

I picked a book (or two)!

More ideas, please!

At the end of this workbook check out a list of books we recommend.

I need even more ideas!

POLL FRIENDS & FAMILY

What are people you know reading right now?
What are their favorite books?

WHAT DOES THE BOX OFFICE SAY?

Discover what movies are based on books. Maybe the book is better!

LOOK TO THE STARS

Book Character Quiz

Turn regular reading comprehension on its head with this writing activity -- a book character quiz!

What You Need:

- Fiction novel previously read and enjoyed
- Paper, pen, pencil
- Character Traits chart

What You Do:

1. Pick a fictional book you like that has at least three distinct main characters.
2. Fill out a Character Traits chart like the one on the next page for three main characters from your book.
3. After you've filled out the chart, work on a "Which Character Do You Resemble?" quiz. Write a multiple-choice question that quizzes someone about their personality based on one item from the chart. For example, for this chart, a question could be:

When you get on a stage, you tend to:

- a. shine like a star and talk freely.
- b. shy away from the spotlight.
- c. sing a song.

If you were to give this question to a friend, you would know that a friend answering "a" resembles the character Peeta.

4. Repeat step #3 to write more quiz questions. Make sure to write a variety of questions so that a quiz-taker could get answers resembling each one of the three characters.
5. After you're done writing questions, write the scoring system. This will tell the player what an answer means for each question.
6. Give the quiz to friends to find out which book character they most resemble!

Slam Book

Have you ever made a slam book? It can be a great way for friends to get to know each other...or it can lead to major hurt feelings! Here's how it works: A name is written at the top of the page of a notebook. The book is passed around to friends or schoolmates, who each write a word or phrase about the person named. It's usually anonymous, which means nobody signs their name to what they write.

What would happen if the characters in your book made a slam book? Would they be fair to one another? Would they write kind things or mean things? Choose two characters from your book. If you're reading a biography or a history, choose two of the historical figures you've read about. Write their names at the tops of the notebook pages below. Then, write about each character from the point of view of the other.
