

The Native Canadians: the Inuits

The Inuit people are Native Canadians. They are Eskimos who live in the far northern areas of Canada. A member of the Inuit community is called an Inuk.

An igloo is an Inuit's home. It is made of snow and ice for the winter and from animal skin for the summer.

They use furs from animals like caribou, polar bears, rabbits, foxes and seal skin to make shirts, pants, boots called kamik, hats and big jackets called anoraks.

They mostly live off meat from hunting animals. They hunt seals, walruses and the bowhead whale with harpoons. They also eat fish and wild berries.

They travel long distances on land and ice sleighs called qamutik, drawn by husky dogs called mushers.

The Inuits are natives from Canada. They are Eskimos.

They live in igloos.

They are wearing shirts, pants, boots, hats and jackets made with animal skin and furs.

The Inuits hunt for their food. They eat meat from seals, bowhead whales, ... and they eat wild berries and fish.

Their means of transportation are ice sleighs, which are pulled by huskies.

What do you think about their way of life?

Their life is different from ours. It's very peculiar. They live in igloos while we live in houses.

Furthermore, you have to like the cold.

They hunt and are not afraid of dangerous animals.

Would you like to experience life in an Inuit community? Explain.

I would like to experience life in an Inuit community, because it's a crazy adventure. Even though, it would be very difficult.

Because, the environment is different. I would like to go, but only with my friends.

I would not go alone.
