Our first president, George Washington, selected the site for the White House in 1791. The cornerstone was laid in 1792 and a competition design submitted by Irish-born architect James Hoban was chosen. After eight years of construction, President John Adams and his wife, Abigail, moved into the unfinished house in 1800. During the War of 1812, the British set fire to the President's House in 1814. James Hoban was appointed to rebuild the house, and President James Monroe moved into the building in 1817. During Monroe's administration, the South Portico was constructed in 1824, and Andrew Jackson oversaw the addition of the North Portico in 1829. During the late 19th century, various proposals were made to significantly expand the President's House or to build an entirely new house for the president, but these plans were never realized.

Usage

Today it is used on all correspondence from the president and as a symbol of the presidency. The seal is often seen on the podium where the president speaks, on the side of the Air Force One, Marine One, and the limousine in which the president rides. It is mounted in the center of Oval Office ceiling and on the iconic rug on the Oval Office floor. When the President leaves the Blue Room to speak to the media, the seal is visible mounted above the doorway. One may also see the seal on the reverse side of the Kennedy half dollar.

Description and Symbols

The eagle's right (or dexter) talon clutches an olive branch with 13 olives and 13 leaves to represent peace. The left (or sinister) talon clutches arrows which represent the need sometimes to go to war to protect the nation.

The eagle holds a ribbon bearing the words "E Pluribus Unum," the motto of the U.S., which means "out of many, one." The number 13 is used to represent the 13 original colonies.

A shield in front of the eagle has 13 red and white stripes, again representing the colonies, with a blue bar above, representing both the unity of colonies into one nation and Congress, which makes laws for all.

Above the eagle is a "glory Or" or halo of gold. In it are 13 white clouds, 13 white stars and many tiny stars. The 50 stars on a field of deep blue circle the eagle and represent the 50 states. The words, "Seal of the President of the United States" surround the seal on a tan field.
