O - “All of you young people who served in the war. . . . You are all a lost generation.” (Gertrude Stein, A Movable Feast).

This generation was the first generation to be labelled in history. Its name refers to individuals who came of age during the First World War, observing an unimaginable loss of life as well as mass immigration.

The term encompasses the general sense of purposelessness and aimlessness many youth experienced at the time. These feelings were famously featured in works of expatriate American writers, such as Ernest Hemingway and F. Scott Fitzgerald, whose novels included themes of disillusionment and cynicism.

O - This group grew up during the Great Depression and most likely fought in World War II. In America, they fought in the Civil War for their rights. Women and men all combined powers to make their country a great one to live in. News broadcaster Tom Brokaw deemed them so in the late '90s because of their moralistic attitude toward the conflict.

O - Also known as “iGen” because most of their lives have been spent using personal technology, such as smartphones, this generation is more racially and ethnically diverse and better educated. In general, this generation is known to take fewer risks. They are more cautious about their actions. The iGen generation is also more tolerant of other cultures, races, opinions, etc. They are more likely to travel and work in different countries

With the advent of social media, the exacerbation of the climate crisis and the rise in mass shooting violence, among many other socio-political pressures, this generation is seen as the most depressed generation as they are less into in-person relationships and friendships. They are more likely to connect with people through social media than in person. They are less likely to read books. Most of their entertainment comes from social media. They are also known to feel like they are alone in this world and not supported. But it is also the generation most likely to engage in social activism.

This generation is more likely to rely on themselves. They do not like to be under control by the government or other authority figures.

It doesn't like to be in serious relationships until much later on in life. They want to make sure they are stable before settling down. Teen pregnancies are also less prominent within this generation.

O - This generation was born during the Great Depression. They grew up with the expectations of having a difficult life in their adulthood. This generation is so-called because they would not speak out against the government. They seemed not to want to make a change or difference in the world. In contrast, they lived their lives, hoping to have enough to, in a general pursuit of modest careers and secure domestic lives.

O - This generation grew up in a time when the United States was prosperous, and the economy boomed. Birth rates were at an all-time high. No more World Wars were going on, and the world was at peace for a while. Their parents, having grown up during the Great Depression, saved all their money. Boomers spent every dollar they earned. Baby Boomers were alive to experience the Cold War, the moon landing, the assassinations of activist Martin Luther King, Jr. and President John F. Kennedy, the Vietnam War and the civil rights movement. They are characterized by national optimism and prosperous consumerism. Their parents, having grown up during the Great Depression, saved all their money. Boomers spent every dollar they earned.

O - This demographic became adults at the turn of the millennium. Key distinctions for this group include remembering the events of 9/11 from personal experience, participating in the rise of the internet and dealing with financial struggles as a result of the Great Recession.

This generation is known to have more traditional relationships. These relationships are the kind to exist before social media and dating apps. Their relationships are known to be built off more on conventional values

This generation was raised in a state where people's opinions and beliefs about controversial issues were split halfway. This could make this generation more unsure of what side to be on.

Yet, it could also result in them being more independent with their opinions and choices. Global warming became a real issue during the adulthood of this generation. For this reason, they are more likely to be cautious of energy conservation and saving the Earth.

O - This is the newest generation. Since they are still babies, their characteristics are not known. Let's hope they will make a significant impact on our world.

O - The birth rate of this generation was much lower compared to that of the previous generation, the Baby Boomer Generation. For this reason, it is sometimes called Generation Bust.

This generation grew up in a world of wars and historical events. This includes but is not limited to the first Gulf War, the fall of the Berlin Wall, and the split of the Soviet Union.

This generation is characterized by reactionism, rebellion, self-reliance and an overall mistrust of institutional authority. Notable developments of their time include the first personal computers and highest rate and the highest level of education in the United States to this day.
