In the first cartoon, we can see two polar bears in the foreground, on the left. The scene takes place in the Arctic and we can notice some kind of a panda in the background, on the right. The three wild animals are standing on two tiny melting and drifting ice floes under a scorching sun at the top of the picture. The two polar bears look astounded to see a panda in the Arctic but in fact it's also a polar bear with a tan, highlighting the effects of global warming on shrinking polar ice caps and on endangered species. Indeed, if we don't fight climate change, polar bears will lose their habitat with no place to live or to hunt !

In the second cartoon, there are a dad and his daughter in pyjamas standing in their living-room. They are hopelessly looking at their Christmas tree which is in fact a cactus. This picture clearly alludes to desertification because of the rise of temperatures and ironically refers to biodiversity loss.
