Dressing and undressing newborns: tips

Many newborns get upset when getting dressed and undressed. The quicker and calmer you are, the less stressed you and your baby will feel.

These tips may help:

- Ensure the room is warm enough, then lay your baby on a soft surface.
- Put your baby in a nappy if they urinate.
- Stretch the neck of the singlet and put the singlet on from behind, supporting your baby's head. When you pull the singlet over your baby's head, try not to let it touch your baby's face. Babies can be very upset by clothing rubbing against their faces.
- Reverse when undressing, again try not to let clothing touch your baby's face.
- Snugly insert your baby's arms into the armholes.
- If you dress your baby in a jumpsuit, unbutton or zip it and lay it on top of it. Place your baby's arms and legs in the holes and fasten the zip or snap fastener.

Make sure your baby has clothing on his feet and hands when going out in the sun – but it's best to keep your baby out of direct sunlight if possible.

Matching Outfits using Baby Clothes for Twins

The easiest way to dress your twins is to dress them in matching clothes. This can be as simple as choosing the same style onesies or shirts in different colours for each child. Alternatively, you can choose more elaborate matching outfits such as for twin boys or suits for twin girls outfits. Matching outfits for newborns are a great way to emphasise the special bond between children.

Mix-and-Match Twin Baby Costumes

Coordination clothing might be a fun alternative if you would rather not dress your twins exactly. This involves selecting clothes with a common theme, color scheme, or pattern. For example, you could dress one twin in a striped shirt and the other in a polka dot shirt or put them both in outfits with a nautical theme. This creates a cohesive look, giving each twin a unique style.
