The eyelift surgery aims to remove the excess skin and fat and stitch the skin below the eye together to provide the treated area a tighter look.

There are multiple ways available for lower eyelid surgery. The type of procedure depends on what you wish to achieve and the anatomy of your eye.

First of all, a surgeon will mark your eyelids before the progression of the surgery. This will help the surgeon to determine where he/she has to make incisions.

The procedure may be completed using general or local anesthesia. Doctors use general anesthesia to make a patient completely asleep so that he/she can't be aware of the procedure. Whereas, local anesthesia numbs only the eye area where the surgeon is about to perform the surgery so that the patient does not feel any pain during the process.

If you have to go through multiple procedures, doctors will recommend general anesthesia. If the procedure is single like just lower eyelid surgery, they will inject you with local anesthesia. One of the benefits of injecting local anesthesia is that they can test eye muscle movements in between the procedure to prevent the risks of any side effects of it.

Doctors will make incisions into the lower eyelid. Then, they eliminate excess skin, fat, and suture and seal the back with stitches resulting in a smoother and lifted appearance.

Doctors may also recommend fat grafting or delivering fat through injections to the deep areas below the eyes to enhance the appearance.
